Stages of NQF development and implementation

Cedefop uses five stages (1) to monitor NQF development and implementation. These are:

- (a) conceptualisation and design;
- (b) official establishment/formal adoption;
- (c) (early) operational stage;
- (d) operational stage;
- (e) evaluation, impact and (re)design.

The stages are presented in the form of a circle signalling the continuous, circular and iterative nature of NQF developments; their relevance and impact depend on continuous feedback from stakeholders and users.

1. Conceptualisation and design

During this stage countries analyse and define objectives, rationale and architecture for an NQF; the resulting outline forms the basis for dissemination, discussion and technical testing. This is also the stage when relevant stakeholders buy into the process.

Progress indicators:

- (a) rationale and objectives have been agreed;
- (b) the architecture, and the conceptual and technical bases have been created;
- (c) awareness raising, consultation and buy-in of key relevant stakeholders;
- (d) technical testing through projects in selected economic areas.

2. Official establishment/formal adoption

At this stage countries officially establish or formally adopt an NQF. Formal adoption means different things in different countries, reflecting the respective national, political and legislative context and culture. It can range from the introduction of specific NQF acts or government decisions to amendments of existing laws and regulations or stakeholder agreements. While formats vary across European countries, formal adoption is generally a prerequisite for implementation.

In many European countries formal adoption of frameworks has taken longer than initially expected, causing delays in implementation.

Progress indicators:

- (a) NQF policy has been officially established/formally adopted (by NQF act, government decision, stakeholder agreement, etc.);

- (b) roles and responsibilities between different stakeholders have been agreed and defined in legal acts or other documents;
- (c) implementation strategy has been adopted (including a roadmap, capacity building needs, financing, etc.).

3. (Early) operational stage

The early (preparatory) operational stage is characterised by concrete implementation actions taken by a country, fully engaging all relevant stakeholders. The recognition of this separate stage reflects the fact that NQF developments require sufficient time, as the move from formal adoption to full operation is demanding and critical for the success of the framework.

Progress indicators:

- (a) implementation structures in place (e.g. fine-tuning governance structures, deciding on leading NQF organisation or partnership);
- (b) introduction and implementation of tools and measures (e.g. by-laws, databases, communication strategies, quality assurance arrangements);
- (c) capacity building of institutions;
- (d) continuing and finalising the allocation of qualifications to levels;
- (e) updating and/or redesigning qualifications based on learning outcomes.

4. Operational stage

The operational stage is the stage of full implementation. The NQF adds value and contributes to meeting the objectives set at the operational stage.

Progress indicators:

- (a) the NQF is a permanent and visible feature of the national education, training and qualifications system, improving transparency by:
 - i. providing a map of, and reference to, all nationally recognised qualifications; this is the case for comprehensive frameworks (implemented in most European countries);
 - ii. indicating NQF levels on certificates and diplomas;
 - iii. providing a reference point for development and review of standards and curricula;
 - iv. providing a reference point for assessment and validation of non-formal and informal learning;
 - v. supporting teachers, trainers and guidance/counselling staff;
 - vi. providing a platform for cooperation of stakeholders across education, training and employment;
 - vii. directly supporting end-users (learners, parents, citizens) to progress in learning and work, notably through qualifications registers and databases;
- (b) the NQF is a permanent feature of the national education, training and qualifications systems, supporting reform and renewal by:
 - i. helping implement learning outcomes across sectors and institutions;
 - ii. opening up to, and including, non-formal qualifications and other types of qualifications;
 - iii. providing information to both education and training, and labour market stakeholders; helping to structure information on skills supply and demand; assisting guidance and career development; helping to identify learning pathways; facilitating certification of experiences gained at work, etc.

5. Closing the circle: NQF evaluation/review and impact

NQFs need to evolve constantly to be relevant and of value. An NQF policy needs to be regularly reviewed and evaluated with respect to its implementation processes, contribution, impact, and to make sure it fulfils its purpose and brings added value to learners and other stakeholders.

Figure 1 above illustrates the circular (and iterative) character of NQF developments, pointing to a need for continuous evaluation and review of the conceptual basis, technical design and stakeholder involvement and buy-in. Another important element at this stage is agreeing on the design and methodology needed to review and evaluate an NQF.
